Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Shultz house at 201 South Main Street is a large 2½ story frame dwelling situated on a narrow lot on the east side of the street. Its plan is a complex cruciform shape with complex roof shapes. The principle facade (west) and north facade feature large gable ends with bands of decorative wooden shingles. The ridges of these gables intersect in the center of the roof, the intersection being pierced by a corbeled brick chimney. Behind this chimney the front gable roof is truncated, jerkinhead style and becomes the roof of a cross gable extending over a South facade bay projection. In the Northeast corner of the roof is located an irregularly shaped hip-roofed unit creating the effect of a square two-story tower.

The front facade is three bays across with the entrance in the central bay. The right bay contains a large window with decorative colored glass of diamond and lozenge design over a single-paned lower sash. The left bay is recessed, not being under the gable end. Windows throughout are 1/1 with entablature molding over the surround, except for a number of decorative windows containing diamond and/or lozenge designs. One such window occurs in the central bay, second floor. A verandah extends across the front and proceeds around the south side to meet previously mentioned bay projection. An unusual feature of the verandah is the location of the low cross gable accenting the porch entrance in the left bay where the facade is recessed.

The south facade shows the house to be six bays deep, the two center bays occupying the projection mentioned. The side walls of the bay on the first floor each contain doors, opening on to the verandah mentioned on the west; and on the east opening on to a small two-story porch with turned posts and ballustrade.

The north facade features a flat-roofed, two-story bay projection symmetrical with that of the south side. This unit is located asymmetricaly under the gable end of the roof. It features a pair of 1/1 windows on each floor flanked and joined in the center by routed boards creating a pilaster effect.

The interior of this house contains much original material, including a small entrance hall dominated by a close-string stairway with turn balusters and large square newel posts topped with urns.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

In size and scale the Shultz house makes a vital contribution to Berlin's historic district. In terms of style and architectural detail, it is one of the most complex and interesting houses in the town. It's richness of form is quickly apparent and adds immensely to the variety of architectural expressions in the district.
